The dining room, added by a previous owner, was harmonized with the rest of the house. A faux-brick wallcovering and wooden beams lend warmth. (February 2007) The dining room was an empty box with hanging floors, says the designer, who restored and painted the floors and added pine cladding. Vintage steel lawn chairs surround the table, which is topped with Russel Wright dishes and aluminum glasses. (February 2003) Interior designer Charles Allem gutted the new family's Penthouse in Manhattan, transforming it into a glamorous space celebrating art déco style. White cabinetry in the dining room was torn out and replaced with mirrors to create a Parisian dining room covered in gold silk. Allem says. The painting is Picasso's. (February 2008) Architect John B. Murray and interior designer Elissa Cullman joined two apartments in a Manhattan building in 1914 to make a generously analog duplex. According to Cullman, the challenge was to seamlessly two spaces and construct a timeless residence. Before: The dining room was once a master bedroom. After: The maloney siphon, from Kentshire Galleries, owns a Tang Dynasty horse. (February 2005) A 1921 residence in Los Angeles was designed by, and the home of architect F. Pierpont Davis. He remained in the family until the current owners, Larry and Clara Yust, bought it after living next door for 20 20 The vaulted ceilings in the dining room are a feature repeated by the architect throughout the residence. A 1955 oil, 759 Prospect Avenue, was created by Larry Yust's father, Walter Yust. (February 2005) Designer Juan Montoya renovated the interiors of a Park Avenue apartment. How they look and fit in the room is important, but it is also imperative to be comfortable. Here are some things you need to know about dining chairs before you buy. Dining tables are usually 30 high while the standard seat height of dining chairs is 18. This distance between seat height and board surface makes it comfortable for most people to sit but always try out tables and chairs together before Some tables have aprons around the edges coming down and can make sitting in a standard chair uncomfortable. If you are buying a table bring one of your existing chairs to the store to try them together. If you are buying chairs and you already own a table ask the store if they have an approval policy that allows you to take home one of chairs without commitment, so you can try it. As a general rule, the back of the chair should be higher than the table surface. How much higher it is up to you. There are so many different styles of dining chairs that it would be impossible to name them all, but there are some that are particularly common. Queen Anne, Regency, Windsor, Mid-Century, Chippendale, and Thonet styles are all common and can often be found in stores. Also very popular are Parsons chairs, which are simple and streamlined and very easy to wallpaper or slipcover. But these aren't the only options. It is not uncommon to see upholstered armchairs, club chairs and even wing chairs at either end of a dining room table. Nor is it unusual to see the upholstered chairs all around the table. Coated dining chairs add softness, comfort and style to the room. If you decide to use them think hard about what is happening in your dining room before settling on a cloth. If you have children pouring a lot you might want to consider a patterned fabric that can hide stains. Another good alternative is the skin, which can be wiped quite easily. Please note that you can also use slipcovers. They can be used to cover upholstered or unupholstered chairs and can be a very practical solution as they can be put in the washing machine when dirty. They are also great because they can quickly and easily change the look of the room. When it comes to designing your dining room, there are many details to consider. While the table stands out as a focal point, don't let your chairs be an omission! Use our handy guide to determine which seating option is best for your space.
