Century 21 hours brooklyn

Century 21 Department Store, which has anchored Bay Ridge's 86th Street shopping corridor for decades, closed for good on December 6. The retail chain, which was described by the Brooklyn Eagle several years ago as selling sought-after designer-brand clothing and accessories at cut-rate prices, announced in September that it had filed for bankruptcy and would close its 13 stores. The Bay Ridge location was opened in 1961. A second Brooklyn store, at City Point in Downtown Brooklyn, opened just four years ago, in 2016. A telephone message confirmed that this store is now closed for business. The chain's website says: Thank you to our loyal customers. Thank you for your continued support and patronage. In the days leading up to the store's closure, long lines of customers waited to scoop up the remaining merchandise. The inside of the store was bare by his last weekend. The spectacular but short-lived Century 21 store in City Point in Downtown Brooklyn. Eagle file photo by Lore Croghan Josephine Beckmann, district manager of Community Board 10, said the loss of Century 21 is significant. For many in our community, Century 21 has served as our local mom and pop department store and I've heard from so many who miss shopping on Century 21 during the holidays, Beckmann said. It was an important anchor shop on 86th Street and I know many hope for new anchors to come to Bay Ridge soon. Local resident Kelly Ann Woodford said Century 21 was one of her favorite stores on 86th Street. Hope all those workers find work soon, Woodford said. Farewell to an era of deals and designer names for less. Insurance woes in the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic were the most important factor in the chain's demise, according to a statement in September by CEO Raymond Gindi. While insurance money helped us to rebuild after suffering the devastating impact of 9/11 [when the chain's Lower Manhattan store was damaged], we now have no viable alternative, but to begin with the closure of our beloved family business, because our insurers, to whom we have paid significant premiums each year for protection from unforeseen circumstances as we experienced today, have taken their backs at this most critical time, he said. While retail sales across the board have suffered greatly due to COVID-19, and Century 21 is no exception, we are confident that if we received a meaningful portion of insurance revenue, we would have been able to save thousands of jobs and weather the storm, hoping for another incredible recovery, Gindi added. We are to do everything in our power to help the company to at least keep the original Bay Ridge store open, City Councilman Justin Brannan and Sen. Andrew Gounardes wrote in a letter to the Gindi family. They were unsuccessful. Bay Ridge residents at the time were stunned by the news and expressed concern about the future of the shopping area. That's going to take a huge bite out of the neighborhood, Gale Young said. Century takes nearly half a block at 86th and 87th. It will be difficult to find new tenants for so much retail space. I used to shop there for my sons because they were babies, said Anna Lisa D. I would do all my Christmas shopping there too. It's a disgrace. There is no place to buy clothes in person. Everything is online now. — Additional material from Raanan Geberer Century 21 Department Store, an icon in New York City for more than 50 years, is legendary for its exceptional range of designer brands at great prices. Skatīt visu Richard Schilling fondly remembers heading to the original Bay Ridge location of Century 21 after school with friends when they lived in nearby Poly Prep as teenagers four decades ago. That was basically our mall growing up, said Schilling, 56, of Sunset Park. The department store, founded in 1961, grew over the years - taking over other stores along 86th Street, morphing into a labyrinthine collection of interconnected storefronts with everything from discount clothing to toys to toys to Articles. Century 21 eventually stretched beyond Bay Ridge to amass 13 locations in the east states, including five outposts in New York City. But Thursday marked the end of an era for the chain, which filed for bankruptcy and announced plans to close all of its stores. The move would eliminate nearly 1,400 jobs, according to Bloomberg News. Century 21 became the last retailer to fall in 2020 as the COVID-19 pandemic accelerates the death of department stores in the U.S. 'It's Such a Shame' On 86th Street, where it all began, concern for the traditionally vibrant shopping strip's future mixed with fond memories of a neighborhood institution. Me and my sisters were always there shopping and our parents were always OK with us going there, Maria Argano, 58, said as she stopped by to window shop. And I used to go there all the time, even for my own kids when they were little. Argano added: It's really hard to think of Bay Ridge without Century 21. It's a shame, it's such a shame. Andrea Watkins said she started going to Century 21 in 1999 when she first arrived in New York City. It quickly became one of my favorite places, said Watkins, 53. Such a big loss for the city. Related NYC Companies Say Insurance Companies Shafted Them on COVID Claims In a Statement to Bloomberg News, Century 21 co-CEO Raymond Gindi blamed the company's insurers for the bankruptcy and impending closures. The insurance companies turned their backs on us at this most critical moment, Gindi told Bloomberg. While retail sales across the board have suffered greatly due to COVID-19, and Century 21 is no exception, we are confident that if we received a meaningful portion of the insurance revenue, we would have been able to save thousands of jobs and weather the storm. So Longs and Sweatpants State Sen. Andrew Gounardes (D-Brooklyn) called the department store vital to our community and curtailed the lost jobs. Gounardes added that it was unacceptable for Century 21's insurers not to pay out the store's business interruption insurance - and called on the state legislature to pass on its bill, which would require insurance companies to pay such claims. If a pandemic is not a legitimate business interruption, then what is? It's time for insurance companies to stop turning their backs on our businesses in their moment of need, Gounardes, who represents Bay Ridge, said in a statement. It's time to hold insurance companies accountable for their actions. John McDonnell, of nearby Dyker Heights, mourned Century 21's impending loss as he stopped there for sweatpants Thursday. Everyone's going to be sad, but were they here shopping? I don't think so. Everybody wants to do it online now, said McDonnell, 82. He looked over his purchase and decided to grab two more pairs of sweat. I need them While I can, I guess, he said. Sign up and receive the latest stories from NRC articles every morning
